

“Change Iran’s Constitution, and the Regime Will Change Itself.”

Change Iran’s Constitution, Change Iran’s Future

Subject: The Fastest Way to Defeat the Ayatollahs

March 9, 2026

Dear Mr. President,

Mr. President, the fastest way to defeat the Ayatollahs is not war — it is to expose and challenge the Constitution that legally protects their dictatorship.

Many analysts continue to speculate that ethnic tensions inside Iran could trigger separatist uprisings. This assumption misunderstands the deeper cultural reality of the region.

Iran’s neighboring ethnic populations—including Azerbaijanis, Kurds, and Baluch—share deep historical and cultural connections with the broader Iranian civilization stretching from Central Asia to the Mediterranean. Although many of these communities strongly oppose the Ayatollahs’ regime, they are unlikely to wage war against Iran itself.

Regional governments are also unlikely to support such uprisings. Attempts to destabilize Iran through ethnic fragmentation are therefore unrealistic and dangerous.

Regardless of the military outcome of any confrontation, several geopolitical realities are already clear.

The greatest losers will once again be the Iranian people, who have already endured forty-seven years of poverty and repression under clerical rule and may be forced to inherit a devastated country.

The greatest geopolitical beneficiaries would likely be Russia and China, which gain strategically from prolonged instability between Iran and the West.

Another prolonged war in the Middle East will not solve Iran’s political crisis.

The battlefield must therefore be changed.

Instead of focusing on military confrontation, international policy should focus on the constitutional foundation of the regime itself.

The strategic objective should be clear:

Pressure the Islamic Republic to accept the formation of a Constituent Assembly and constitutional reform.

Iran’s crisis is not fundamentally a military problem.

It is a constitutional problem.

If the Constitution of the Ayatollahs falls, the entire regime will fall with it.

And history will remember that America helped the Iranian people win their freedom — without firing a single shot.

Respectfully,

Sohrab ChamanAra

www.cyrusforce.org