

Dear Senator,

I submitted a message through your website and received an automated reply inviting me to contribute to your campaign. I understand this was likely a general response; however, I would like to briefly clarify the purpose of my contact.

I have prepared a concise booklet (approximately 5,000 words) presenting a policy perspective that addresses what I believe is a 47-year misunderstanding concerning the Middle East — particularly Iran. I believe the material could be useful if you or a member of your staff would be willing to review it; it can be read in about thirty minutes.

If you could kindly provide an appropriate email address, I would be pleased to forward the manuscript for your consideration. Should it be of interest, I would also be honored to send you a signed copy once the book is published.

I write out of sincere concern that powerful special interests have too often diverted American resources away from long-term stability and peace. I believe this moment calls for careful judgment and courageous policy thinking.

Respectfully,

Sohrab Chamanara
